

Green Marketing Practices and Consumer Awareness

Cultura: International Journal of Philosophy of Culture and Axiology

Journal Homepage Register Login Search

Vol. 23 No. 1s (2026): Volume 23, Number 1s – 2026

ORIGINAL ARTICLE

Green Marketing Practices and Consumer Awareness

PDF

Dr. Uzma. A. Shaikh, Dr V Sai Prasanth, Prof. Sapna Sugandha, Dr. Sunil Kumar, Dr. Sai Kalyani Yogini C, Dr. Raja Sekhar Reddy Pothamsetti

Published 2026-01-12

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License.

Abstract

Green marketing has evolved as a critical interdisciplinary paradigm integrating environmental science, consumer behavior, and sustainable business strategy. This study critically examines the nexus between green marketing practices and consumer awareness, with particular emphasis on their influence on pro-environmental purchasing behavior. Key green marketing instruments—such as eco-labeling, life cycle-based product claims, sustainable packaging, carbon footprint disclosure, and corporate environmental responsibility—are systematically analyzed to evaluate their effectiveness in

Description

Original article in Cultura: International Journal of Philosophy of Culture and Axiology, Volume 23, Number 1 (2026). The paper examines the relationship between green marketing practices and consumer awareness, with emphasis on eco-labeling, sustainable packaging, carbon-footprint disclosure, environmental responsibility and pro-environmental purchasing behavior.

Source: Cultura: International Journal of Philosophy of Culture and Axiology article page.